November 1779.

SEVERAL respectable Inhabitants of London and Westminster, actuated by Principles of Humanity, having begun a SUBSCRIPTION, to support a Charity, called,

The Benevolent Institution,

FOR THE SOLE PURPOSE OF

Delivering POOR MARRIED WOMEN,

AT THEIR OWN HABITATIONS, which has met with the Countenance and Support of many Ladies and Gentlemen, think it their Duty to submit to the Public the Motives of their Procedure, and the following short Sketch of their Plan.

To alleviate the Distresses of our Fellow-Creatures, under Circumstances the most perilous and alarming; to extend the Hand of Charity to the most deserving Objects, and this at a Time when their Situation calls in the most forcible Manner for Assistance, is an Act highly worthy the Practice of those who have Hearts to feel for the Calamities of the Unfortunate.

The present Age is not more distinguished by its Knowledge and Refinement, than by its Attention to the Wants of Misery, and the Cries of Indigence: And to the Honor of the British Nation be it remembered, that there

there is scarce a Calamity incident to Human Nature that has not some Charity, public or private, instituted for its Relief. Thus, when Afflictions surround, and the Cheek of Misery is furrowed by the Tear of Sorrow, it is kindly wiped away by the Hand of Benevolence !

To mention nothing of our Hospitals in general, those for the Reception of poor Women in the Hour of Labour seem particularly deserving of Praise, from the laudable Motives on which they were first instituted ; and if there were no Objections to those Houses of Reception, the Propriety of this Address to the Public would have been precluded ; but let it be considered,

First, That there are Thousands of poor married Women in this Metropolis, who occasionally want charitable Assistance in their Distress, but who cannot procure Admission into the Hospitals, if they were disposed to solicit it,

Secondly, That if all who might solicit could be admitted, yet the very Circumstance of separating Women from their Husbands and Families must be highly disagreeable and inconvenient to the Parties; for not to insist upon the Fact, that a poor Couple have as much Tenderneſs for each other, as those in more elevated Life, yet the Absence of a Mother from her Family must create great Confusion and Distress; for though a Woman during the Time of such Indisposition, may not be able to do much in her Family, her being on the Spot to direct what should be done, will be productive of great Regularity and good Order; and render unnecessary the Superintendence of the Husband, on whose Labour the Family depending entirely for Support, not an Hour of his Time can be lost without an essential Injury.

The Design, therefore, of this Charity is, to afford to Poor Married Women, at their own Habitations, the Assistance of Midwives, properly instructed in their Business, and all necessary Medicines during the Time of their Lying-in; and in all Cases of Difficulty and Danger, the Advice and Assistance of a Physician and Man-midwife; which, as it may be done comparatively at a small Expence, the Promoters of this Plan wish to recommend it to the Notice and Patronage of the Public, hoping for the Assistance of the Liberal in the Execution of a Scheme calculated for the Preservation of Life, the Relief of Indigence, the Encouragement of Population, and, as a Consequence of all these, the general Welfare of Society.
